A LETTER FROM THE STUDIO

"Extra! Extra!" That's what newspaper boys once cried out from street corners across America to herald a major headline.

Well, those words are being heard again back at The Walt Disney Studios, where we have an "Extra" special project under way. It's called Newsies, a movie about the rough-and-tumble world of New York newspaper boys at the turn of the century.

The film centers on the 1899 strike of the lowly "newsies" against those legendary and tyrannical publishing giants of the day, William Randolph Hearst and Joseph Pulitzer.

This is a remarkable story of "little guys" triumphing over rich and powerful interests. And, to make it even more memorable, we're going to bring back an extraordinary form of moviemaking—the musical. Newsies will be a full-blown all-stops-out movie musical . . . the kind "they don't make anymore."

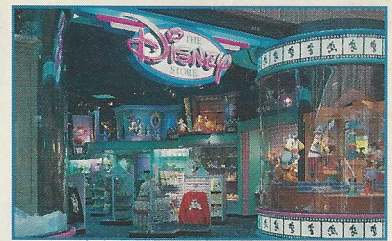

We believe the musical is overdue for a comeback. From The Wizard of Oz to West Side Story, from Mary Poppins to Cabaret, some of the most unforgettable films of all time have been musicals. But in recent years, the musical has all but disappeared from theaters.

Newsies is being directed by Kenny Ortega, who choreographed Dirty Dancing. The music is by Alan Menken, who wrote the Academy Award-winning music for The Little Mermaid and also composed the music for our upcoming Beauty and the Beast. The cast features Robert Duvall and Ann-Margret.

But the real stars are the boys who play the newsies themselves. You can see them pictured above with me and Kenny Ortega. I wish I had the space to tell you about each and every one, since they are a group of amazingly energetic and talented performers.

The film is still in production and won't be released until early next year. But, back at the studio, we've seen some of the early footage, and I believe that when it comes out, Newsies stands a strong chance of making some pretty big headlines all its own.

New Episodes! KIDS INCORPORATED

Weekday afternoons get a new twist with new episodes of Kids Incorporated, one of our most popular weekday series. Three new kids and five new dancers will be joining the cast. Kids Incorporated is the tale of a group of young performers who dream of show business success, perform their music at their local hangout, The P*lace, and cope with the problems of everyday life. Kids Incorporated airs weekdays at 5:00 p.m.; new episodes premiere beginning Monday, November 4.

For the Holidays THANKSGIVING MARATHONS

The Disney Channel will celebrate Thanksgiving with two special days of programming. On Turkey Day, it's "Those Amazing Animals," a lineup of great family films that begins at 9:00 a.m. with Rex Harrison in Doctor Dolittle. Other highlights throughout the day include two classic Lassie movies, The Disney Channel Premiere Film Chips, The War Dog (11:30 a.m.), the classic Disney adventure White Fang (6:00 p.m.), and the heartwarming—and amazing—Adventures of Milo and Otis (8:00 p.m.), followed by Jean-Jacques Annaud's superb wilderness adventure The Bear (at 10:00 p.m.) This day of themed family programming ends with an encore presentation of Born Free at 12:00 a.m.

The following day, the theme turns to "Flights of Fancy." Among the day's offerings are Disney's classic Peter Pan (at 6:30 p.m.) and

World Television Premiere REAL-LIFE ADVENTURE MAKING WHITE FANG

Filmmakers realized early on that there was only one place to film White Fang: in Alaska, the setting of Jack London's adventure novel. But that involved two shooting periods, one in winter, and one five weeks later in spring. As Walt Disney Studios Chairman Jeffrey Katzenberg related in these pages, the winter shoot was plagued by a major problem: lack of snow. But no one was prepared for the problem presented by the spring shoot five weeks later.

That's when bears, hungry and irritable after their winter hibernation, roamed the area the cast and crew were filming in. "One of the nice things about the winter shoot was that there weren't any bears," recalled Ethan Hawke (whose past credits include Dead Poets Society). "We didn't have to worry about losing a director to a bear." Among the safeguards taken during the shoot were directions for cast and crew on how to act when meeting one of the creatures. Fortunately, there weren't any serious incidents, and White Fang was captured against Alaska's magnificent landscape.

In addition to Ethan Hawke, the film stars Klaus Maria Brandauer, whom subscribers will recall from Out of Africa. And if the animal stars look familiar, they should be: White Fang is played by Jed, the star of The Journey of Natty Gann, and the huge Kodiak bear in the film is none other than Bart the Bear from The Bear.

Behind the Scenes

THE MAKING OF DISNEY'S BEAUTY AND THE BEAST

Beauty and the Beast, which appears in theatres around the country in November, is the 30th animated classic from The Walt Disney Studios. David Ogden Stiers (of MASH fame), who provided one of the voices in the film, is the host and narrator of The Making of Beauty and the Beast, which goes behind the scenes of this revolutionary animated film. The special features interviews with the film's animators, and with the stars whose voices helped bring the characters to life, including Angela Lansbury, Jerry Orbach, and, of course, David Ogden Stiers himself. It's a fascinating look at the creation of Beauty and the Beast—including the techniques used to create a sequence never achieved before in the history of animation.

Holly, Iggy the Iguana, Gloria the Gopher and Jacob the Bluejay from the gentle series Under the Umbrella Tree help their friend “The Great Goldberg” rediscover the meaning of the Chanukah season. And also beginning November 25, The Disney Channel presents Lights, an animated telling of the Chanukah story. Narrated by Judd Hirsch, Lights features the voices of Leonard Nimoy and Paul Michael Glaser.

The Magical World of Disney DRAMA, COMEDY, & FANTASY

Among the offerings on The Magical World of Disney (Sundays at 7:00 p.m.) in December are three films that run the gamut from drama to comedy and fantasy. On December 8, Hayley Mills stars in the encore presentation of Back Home. This Disney Channel Premiere Film chronicles an English family's struggle to piece together their lives following World War II. On the lighter side, it's classic Disney comedy with Fred Mac Murray in The Happiest Millionaire on December 22. Students of Disney history take note: scenes

Togetherness HOLIDAY TRADITIONS WITH A TWIST

*"The world is too much with us;
late and soon,
Getting and spending, we lay waste our powers. . ."*

—William Wordsworth

As life gets busier and busier, the holidays sometimes lose their magic. It's easy to get caught up in the getting and spending, and forget the whole purpose of the season—and what's really important to the family.

But it doesn't have to be that way. Roderic Gorney, M.D., Ph.D., a professor of psychiatry at UCLA and director of the Program on Psycho-Social Adaptation and the Future, says holidays shouldn't be a meaningless ritual, but rather a means of drawing attention to what counts. The key is to bring the celebration into your own living room, finding ways to make the season especially touching to your own family.

"The holidays ought to be re-crafted by a family to ensure their essence doesn't get lost in the trappings," says Gorney. Admittedly, he says, it takes flexibility and a willingness to be creative. But families that do find a special holiday format are developing a sense of belonging to something special—"a personal, family identity," Gorney says.

Some families end up celebrating very creatively. One family Gorney knows goes to a redwood grove every Thanksgiving, with a picnic dinner in hand, to plant trees and spend some special time outdoors together. "They've been doing it for 18 years, and their teenagers are eager to make sacrifices to keep participating in that trip," says Gorney.

Another family Gorney knows likes to spend their holidays sailing in the family's boat, exploring the world together away from the big city. Part of the fun for them, explains Gorney, is the chance to celebrate separately, as a family.

Sailing to a deserted isle or driving to a redwood forest to develop a family tradition isn't for everyone. But even something as traditional as a Christmas tree-trimming party or a family candle-lighting ceremony can be adapted in ways that mean something special and unique.

For some families, taking the time to bake or get involved in holiday craft projects becomes a fun tradition that takes the edge off the shopping and party-going. Others make a point of helping in a soup kitchen, singing carols to shut-ins or visiting a hospital.

What's important, says Gorney,

STARTING YOUR OWN HOLIDAY TRADITIONS

1. Take the time several weeks before the holidays hit to talk about what you'd like to do to celebrate. Involve the whole family and be creative. Is there something you always thought would be fun? Is there something you've always imagined doing, but never did?
2. Think about the activities of the season—dinners, parties, decorating, even shopping—and try to find ways to make those efforts especially fun and rewarding for the family.
3. Consider things the family can do to make a difference for others in the community.
4. If your family decided to make changes in what you typically have done, and the changes involve other relatives, explain to those affected why you're putting a new spin on tradition. Try to find ways to involve them, too, during the holiday season.

DISNEY CHANNEL CELEBRITIES SHARE THEIR HOLIDAY TRADITIONS

Terra McNair of the Mickey Mouse Club: "Christmas is definitely my favorite holiday. I love how the smell of the Christmas tree fills the entire house and all the bright lights that come on when the sun goes down. I also enjoy waking up to my grandmother's cinnamon rolls on Christmas morning."

Alan Thicke, of the Not Quite Human Disney Channel Premiere Films: "Recently my family's Christmas tradition has been to spend Christmas Eve at Walt Disney World because I host the Christmas morning parade on television. We then rush to the airport at noon, arriving in LA just in time for Christmas dinner as prepared at home by my dad and sister."

is putting the thought and time into the season, trying to make it something other than a pre-packaged, ready-to-serve holiday. Whatever it is that the family enjoys doing together—star-gazing, skateboarding, or just sitting around the fire—it should be built into the family's celebration.

Friendship YOUNG AND OLD TOGETHER

You'd think they'd have little in common. They don't go to the same schools, have mutual friends, or play tennis together. But they connect.

Like the relationship chronicled in The Disney Channel Premiere Film Mark Twain & Me (which premieres November 22), friendships between seniors and the young can be enormously rewarding to both age groups. Frequently such relationships occur between grandparents and their grandchildren, but sometime such a friendship starts independent of family ties.

When friendships happen between those who have little in common, says Gary Small, M.D., associate professor of psychiatry at the UCLA School of Medicine and co-author of Parentcare (Bantam, 1990), they tend to be solid. "I would bet that such a connection would be based more on feelings, sensibilities and emotional likenesses than on shared experiences," Small says.

And unlike relationships between children and parents which are fraught with the classic parent-child struggles—"such as 'go clean up your room,'" says Small—friendships that skip a generation free both the younger and older person from the traditional roles.

"For the younger person, it can be exciting, almost like being in a time capsule, magical, just being with someone who can make history live and has such a long-term perspective," says Small. "And for an older person, he can recapture his youth and suspend—even for a little while—his mortality."

Small is an advocate of young/old friendships, although he warns that, like any relationship, they, too, can be problematic. But generally, he says, "they're great, healthy, important—not just for the older generation to help them maintain a sense of usefulness, but for the younger generation as well."

Most younger people, says Small, are very age-oriented and keenly sensitive to the differences between, for example, a 10-year-old and a teenager. But if young people can transcend the age gap they can learn one of life's essential lessons: how to connect with other people based on who they are.

Sometimes that's not easy. Small says that many young people don't like being around the older generation, and there is a significant amount of prejudice against old age in society today. But as the graying of America continues, he says, the anti-aging attitudes will mellow. While only 4

TALKING POINTS: FOSTERING RELATIONSHIPS BETWEEN YOUNG AND OLD

Mark Twain and Me: It's exciting and heartwarming to envision the friendship between the celebrated and senior Mark Twain and a young girl. Somehow it makes Twain seem more alive, more human, to know he invested time and energy in a friendship with a person so young. And imagine being able to sit for hours and talk with one of the world's greatest storytellers.

How can families foster such relationships today? Gary Small, M.D., co-author of Parentcare, offers these suggestions:

- Encourage children to spend time alone with their grandparents.
- Help your children learn to truly listen to others, to engage in conversation, rather than just relate a series of "What I did today" statements. Encourage them to ask questions about what their senior friends or grandparents say, and what they in their lives thought then and what they think now.
- Ask grandparents and children what they would like to do together and try to facilitate it.
- Identify your own anxieties about spending time with a person who may have some special needs. Are you afraid, for example, that he or she might fall? If so, find out how to prevent that and what to do if it happens.

FAMILIES

A BOOK FOR ALL AGES

Between Brothers & Sisters: A Celebration of Life's Most Enduring Relationship by Adele Faber and Elaine Mazlish (Avon Books, $9.95). Small children, teenagers, and parents will all get a kick out of this photo collection of siblings, young and old, curious, loving, angry, playing and just plain living.

percent of Americans were 65 or older during Mark Twain's time, 12 percent—39 million people—are in that category today.

Growing old isn't easy, nor is it always fun to observe and share, says Small. But by fostering relationships between young and old, not only can we make sure that some of life's great stories are told and passed on, but the process of aging can be eased for us all.

Children & Education IMPROVING TEST-TAKING SKILLS

There's one thing about school that most people will never like and many people will always fear: tests. No matter how small the stakes, the blank answer sheet is always a bit intimidating.

Judith Myers-Walls, Ph.D.,

associate professor in the Department of Child Development and Family Studies at Purdue University, says that anxiety is always going to go with test-taking, but it's important that children learn how to apply knowledge and information, a major function of school testing. "Parents have to keep in mind that learning how to learn is more important than learning certain facts," Myers-Walls says.

Schools will continue to use exams and quizzes, and it's important that children develop test-taking skills. In fact, interest in standardized tests is on the rise: President Bush's education plan calls for a series of national tests to assess educational achievement, and many states already use a variety of standardized examinations.

Children's concerns about tests vary depending on their age, says Myers-Walls. In early elementary school, most children are concerned with trying to please their teachers and their parents, and they focus on the adult, not on themselves. "In preschool and at home, everything they do is generally wonderful," says Myers-Walls, "so they may come into public school with absolutely no test-taking skills." In preschool and kindergarten, children may not be expected to finish activity books or exercises, and they frequently don't know, when they reach first grade, that they should answer every item on the test or that there will be a time limit.

Myers-Walls suggests that parents not assume that their child automatically knows what a multiple choice test is all about, or even why tests are given. They should sit down with the child early in his or her school career, explain what tests are, and teach some of the basic skills of test-taking.

Brick Vac.

It's new! The kid-powered sweeper that makes bricks disappear.

The new Brick Vac comes filled with 131 LEGO pieces for lots of fun. And when the building's done, Brick Vac rolls into action. Its paddle wheel motion scoops up brick after brick and stores them away. After a hard day at play, there's no better way to give kids a little pick-me-up.

In later elementary school, children are more concerned about how they are doing in relation to their peers, and they begin to feel competitive. They're outcome-oriented, says Myers-Walls, but their self-concepts are quite vulnerable, and a less-than-desired grade can be devastating.

By middle school, children begin to develop more sophisticated thinking strategies and are concerned about their competence and success. They're much less concerned about pleasing adults—they may not want to excel to any extreme—although they do tend to still care what their parents think.

By high school, students are much more future-oriented, and they are typically trying to build skills and expertise in preparation for college or a career.

Parents can help at every stage. Myers-Walls recommends that they help their child see a test in perspective, emphasizing the positive and the parents' own values about education. For example, for a child who gets three words right on a spelling test, Myers-Walls suggests that parents coach the student to try for five or six words right the following week, emphasizing the number of right

TEST-TAKING TIPS

1. Read the directions carefully when the instructor hands out the test and be sure to ask questions if you don't understand them.
2. If you don't know the answer to a question, skip it and go on. Mark it so you can go back to it after you've completed the rest of the exam.
3. Don't put off studying for a test until the night before. Real learning occurs through studying that takes place over a period of time. Get a good night's sleep.
4. Read the questions carefully.
5. Pace yourself. Look quickly at the entire examination to see what types of questions are included and find out how long you have to complete the test.
6. When you get the corrected test back, use it as a tool to improve your test-taking skills. Go over each incorrect answer and figure out why you got it wrong.

SOME HELP ON FEEDING KIDS

From food fights to nutrition, getting children to eat right seems to be a universal challenge. To help, the American Academy of Pediatrics, with the Food Marketing Institute and the American Dietetic Association, have published four free booklets: "Growing Up Healthy," "Feeding Kids Right Isn't Always Easy," "What's to Eat?" and "Right from the Start." They're full of practical reality-based advice, including charts on topics that range from the six common childhood eating problems to how to deal with picky eaters. Write Dept. C, American Academy of Pediatrics, P.O. Box 927, Elk Grove, IL 60009-0927, and enclose a self-addressed, stamped business-sized envelope.

Kids in The Kitchen

MOLASCO COOKIES

For one member of The Disney Channel Magazine staff, the Holiday season is always marked by the baking of these old-fashioned molasses sugar cookies. It's really a project for parents, but the younger family members can help out with the measuring, sifting and mixing—and the actual rolling of the finished cookie dough. Waiting for the dough to chill in the ice box was always half the fun.

2½ cups sifted flour	½ tsp. salt
2 tsp. baking soda	¾ cup shortening
1 tsp. cinnamon	¼ cup dark molasses
½ tsp. powdered cloves	1 egg
½ tsp. ginger	additional sugar

1. Combine sifted flour, baking soda, cinnamon, cloves and ginger.
2. Melt shortening and allow to cool slightly. (You don't want to cook the egg when it's added to the shortening.)
3. Beat 1 cup of sugar and the molasses into the shortening; then beat in the egg. Mix well.
4. Add the flour mixture and combine well.
5. Refrigerate dough 4-5 hours or overnight.
6. Shape dough into 1-inch balls and roll in additional sugar until lightly coated.
7. Place on a lightly greased baking sheet and bake in a preheated, 375°F oven for 8-10 minutes.

Makes approximately 2½ dozen cookies.

answers, not wrong ones. Setting realistic goals can help limit a child's frustration and teach how to build on past performance.

For a child who has done extremely poorly, parents can say things like, "I know you really studied hard for this," or, "You finished all the items," (if it's true). If the child is interested, parents can look through the exam, question by question, and try to explore with the child what was being asked. Did the child know the information but become confused by the question, or was there a knowledge gap?

If the test is poorly constructed—confusing to the parent, too—Myers-Walls says it's all right to say, "I can tell why you got confused." If problem questions are a recurrent issue, she advises parents to work with the teachers, principal, and other parents to develop appropriate tests at the school.

Sometimes, when reviewing test questions, a parent may find that the child is doing fine but is interpreting some of the questions creatively, applying the knowledge in a broader way than the test structure allows. When that happens, Myers-Walls says, parents can reassure the child by saying something like, "I like the way you're thinking; you're doing fine." Or, the parent can show the child how to answer the question within the test's framework.

By coaching children through the anxiety of test-taking, parents can make a big difference in their children's school—and career—performance, says Myers-Walls.

ARE YOU MY MOTHER?

According to a recent study published in Pediatrics, newborns in the first hours of life are capable of responding to a mother's unique smell, probably a key part of babies' recognition of their mothers. The early sense of smell may help premature infants in developing an enhanced relationship to their mothers or caretakers.

The study involved one-day old male and female infants born at the University of California, Irvine Medical Center. Some babies were given citrus odors followed by stroking, some received only stroking and no odor, and others were given the stroking followed by the odor. Infants who received the odor followed by the stroking later responded to the odor by turning their heads toward the smell, even when asleep.

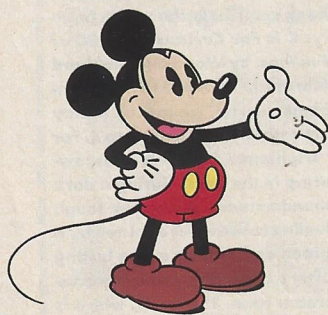

I FEEL...

Sometimes it's hard to put words to feelings, but a new children's book could help the whole family. C is For Curious: An ABC of Feelings, by Woodleigh Hubbard (Chronicle Books, $12.95), combines colorful, whimsical, trendy art with feelings from A to Z. For "frightened," there's a cat cowering in the grass during a dark thunderstorm. Jealous—a tough feeling to draw—is depicted by a green and orange snake lusting after a dog with a three-scoop ice cream cone. The book, which is Hubbard's first, offers humor and insight for children and adults.

Disney Facts OUR READERS WANT TO KNOW

Why was the name of famed illustrator Kay Nielsen listed in the credits for The Little Mermaid, since he has been dead for many years?

—T.R., Lake Park, GA

After the success of Snow White, Walt Disney began dozens of projects. One of them was The Little Mermaid, and Walt Disney asked Kay Nielsen to prepare some story sketches. With the coming of World War II, The Little Mermaid was shelved and the project was not revived until the 1980s. At that time, the Disney artists decided to give him screen credit for that reason. Nielsen is better known at Disney for his concept sketches for the Night on Bald Mountain segment in Fantasia (now available for a short time on video).

What was the Disney movie in which Kurt Russell starred as a young rebel soldier during the Civil War?

—S.C., San Marcos, CA

The film was the three-part television miniseries Willie and the Yank (1967). The European theatrical version was called Mosby's Marauders.

Is it true that Walt Disney created Bugs Bunny, the Warner Brothers cartoon character?

—P.O., Tacoma, WA

In the 1930s it was very common for the cartoon studios to copy from each other. Walt Disney did not create Bugs Bunny—but he did create a similar-looking character, Max Hare, in his 1935 cartoon The Tortoise and the Hare. Some Warner Brothers artists and animation historians have admitted that Bugs copied elements from Max's design and personality traits. (Bugs Bunny was created in 1940.)

Is the Ben Wright in the credits for The Jungle Book the same Ben Wright who did the voice of Grimsby in The Little Mermaid?

—M.S., Los Angeles, CA

Yes, the same actor provided the voice for Rama the Wolf in The Jungle Book. Even earlier he had voiced Roger Radcliff in 101 Dalmatians. Mr. Wright passed away in July, 1989.

Can you suggest any good biographies on Walt Disney?

—J.L., Mobile, AL

Bob Thomas's 1976 biography Walt Disney: An American Original is currently available in a paperback edition from Pocket Books. There is also a brand new biography, The Man Behind the Magic, by Katherine and Richard Greene, published by Viking. The Greenes relied on new interviews with family and friends to show how the events of Walt's boyhood had a great impact on his later life.

Looking Back FLYING FOR FIFTY YEARS

When one looks for the most endearing of the Disney animated classics, it is often not one of the grand masterpieces like Snow White, Pinocchio, or Bambi that comes to mind, but one of the shortest—Dumbo. The simple story of the little elephant with the big ears has universal appeal. How can anyone not be enthralled by the cute little guy who overcomes a handicap by turning it into an asset? It was on October 23, 1941—50 years ago—that Dumbo premiered. From the time that Walt Disney first read the galleys for the story, he knew that it would make a fine film. Story work took only six months and animation one year, very quick by Disney standards, and the production came in at a cost of only $182,000. At 64 minutes, the film was short, but Walt refused to lengthen it. He rightly realized that he had a gem just the way it was, and critics over the past half century agreed. So, let's not forget the little pachyderm on his milestone birthday—Happy Birthday, Dumbo.

THE AMERICAN TEACHER AWARDS

The second annual all-star gala honoring America's outstanding educators

A year ago, Sylvia Washburn of Toledo, Ohio, was selected as "The Outstanding Teacher of 1990" by her peers. The occasion was a landmark television event: The Walt Disney Company Presents The American Teacher Awards. It was an evening in which star-powered entertainment embraced education to celebrate the men and women committed to teaching America's young people.

Now the stage is being set for the second annual presentation of The American Teacher Awards on Sunday, November 24. And from the perspective of a year, Sylvia Washburn speaks clearly of just what the American Teacher Awards ceremony meant to her. "I was filled with pride," Ms. Washburn says. "And not just pride in myself, but pride for all of our teachers. I think viewers saw that we were intelligent people who are proud of our profession."

Ms. Washburn's sentiments are echoed by Joyce Briscoe of Albuquerque, New Mexico. Ms. Briscoe was honored last year as the outstanding teacher in the field of English. "It brought a great sense of satisfaction," she says,

"and a feeling of emotional renewal. You know, teachers often feel so alone in their work. I wish every teacher could experience that moment just once in their life."

Celebrating the American teacher and bestowing upon them the recognition often given to star entertainers and athletes is the goal and ambition of The American Teacher Awards. "This program is undoubtedly the most important project The Disney Channel has ever undertaken," explains John F. Cooke, President of The Disney Channel. "Each of us remembers those teachers who have made a lasting contribution to our education and our lives. It is our hope that The American Teacher Awards will recognize and enhance the stature of educators in American society."

This year, The American Teacher Awards, funded in part by The Coca-Cola Company, will be honoring 36 teachers—three each in 12 different subject fields of education, subject fields ranging from Early Childhood and General Education to Mathematics and Vocational Arts. The teachers have been chosen through a

A YEAR IN THE LIFE: A PORTRAIT OF TWO TEACHERS

Sylvia Washburn, Toledo, Ohio, with Michael Eisner, Chairman of The Walt Disney Company.

"I still feel like a celebrity," laughs Sylvia Washburn, who was chosen "Outstanding Teacher of 1990" at last year's American Teacher Awards. One immediate result of her award, Ms. Washburn notes, was the sense of pride that swept over the Marshall School in Toledo, Ohio, where she taught. "Both students and teachers were proud to be a part of Marshall School," she says, "and that was such a wonderful feeling." Currently, Ms. Washburn has left Marshall Elementary School to take a position in the consulting teaching program in Toledo. "It's a mentoring and observing role with other teachers," she says. "We also evaluate teacher performances, but in a way that uses our experience to serve as resources and mentors for teachers."

For Joyce Briscoe of Albuquerque, New Mexico, it's been a very busy year. "The American Teacher Award brought me high visibility in my community," she says. "It's given me new opportunities to get other people involved in education." Her efforts have included sitting on both local and national scholarship boards, lecturing student teachers, and involving young people in registering to vote. Ms. Briscoe also made an appearance on Good Morning America to discuss teaching sensitive issues such as the Persian Gulf Crisis. And Ms. Briscoe recently became the first teacher representative to be appointed to the advisory board of New Mexico's State Land Commission. The commission provides a major source of revenue for New Mexico's public schools.

selection process overseen by the nation's most prestigious educational associations.

During The American Teacher Awards telecast, the audience at the ceremony and at home will meet each of these educators in short video profiles. From each field an outstanding teacher will be selected, and the entire 36 teachers will choose, from that group of 12, "The Outstanding Teacher of 1991." (In the weeks following The American Teacher Awards, The Disney Channel will present its third season of The Disney Channel Salutes The American Teacher, in which this year's 36 honorees are profiled at greater length. A new teacher profile will premiere every Tuesday at 8:50 p.m. and encore on Sunday at 3:50 p.m., beginning November 26. All times are ET/PT.)

The Walt Disney Company Presents The American Teacher Awards is a marriage of education and entertainment. At last year's program, the celebrity presenters included Carol Burnett and Robin Williams, Oprah Winfrey and Tom Selleck, Goldie Hawn and Pat Riley, each regaling the teachers and the audience with their own recollections of the roles teachers played in their lives. And, of course, what would a major awards ceremony be without gala production numbers and stirring music?

Producing The American Teachers Awards is the creative team of Gary Smith and Dwight Hemion, who brought last year's ceremony to life. They'll be attempting to top that achievement—a difficult task, given the fact that last year's program was awarded an Emmy. Indeed, USA Today hailed The Walt Disney Company Presents The American Teacher Awards as the best awards show of 1990.

The American Teacher Awards again promises to be an evening of emotion, music, pride, and celebration. For the 36 educators to be honored on November 24, the anticipation is growing. But as Joyce Briscoe knows, the meaning of the awards doesn't end with the ceremony. "It keeps building all throughout the year," she says. "Right now, the teachers are caught up in the event itself. They don't realize this is going to change their lives forever." □

While sailing from England to America on board the S.S. Minnetonka, 11-year-old Dorothy Quick spotted Samuel Langhorne Clemens, better known as Mark Twain. A true international celebrity, Twain was as famous for the irreverent wit of his speeches, lectures and quips as for his novels and stories. Now in the winter of his life—he was 72—Twain had just received an honorary degree from Oxford University and had been the toast—and talk—of London.

Twain was also Dorothy Quick's favorite author, and so she circled the deck of the Minne- tonka that has a lot to say about relationships, about loneliness, about reaching out and sharing. And it's also the story of a little girl who brought cheer to Twain in the last years of his life."

For despite his public triumphs, Mark Twain was no stranger to personal tragedy. He outlived his wife and his daughters, losses that scarred him deeply.

"He was a lonely man in his old age," Robards acknowledges. "And he was a strange, complex man. He suffered from depressions throughout his life and he had a dark side to him. He was famous for his pessimism and there were times when he was weary and wanted to be quit of life."

Weary Mark Twain might have been—and heartsore, too, but in Mark Twain and Me his meeting with Dorothy sheds a new light on his life. Dorothy quickly discovers her ideal name for him by looking at his signature in his books. It's a name that establishes the two as equals in their adventures: she calls him SLC for Samuel Langhorne Clemens.

"Dorothy reaches out to Twain," Robards observes. "And Dorothy is lonely, too, having lost her father at an early age. Theirs is the relationship of a grandfather to a granddaughter."

Mark Twain and Me is a portrait of friendship—"sweet and funny" and also, as Robards noted, tragic. For time is fleeting, and the friendship of Dorothy Quick and Mark Twain must run to its inevitable end. For Robards, his favorite scene in the film comes just before its conclusion, when the ailing writer, touched again by tragedy, sojourns in Bermuda in an attempt to recover his health. A worried Dorothy persuades her mother to make the journey that she may see SLC once more.

"He walks into the room and sees Dorothy," Robards says. "And there's this sense of renewal, of life returning to him as he becomes SLC once more—to say goodbye." □ tonka until an amused Twain asked her if she was going to speak to him. A happy Dorothy proceeded to tell Twain her favorite passages in the books of his that she'd read. Twain was taken aback and delighted, and the two became boon companions for the remainder of the voyage. It was the beginning of a friendship that would continue until the last days of Twain's life. Dorothy Quick would later look back on that period of her life in a memoir Enchantment: A Little Girl's Friendship with Mark Twain.

The moving story of Dorothy Quick and Mark Twain's friendship—and Dorothy's memoir—forms the basis of The Disney Channel Premiere Film Mark Twain and Me. Jason Robards portrays the aged author, and young Amy Stewart plays Dorothy Quick.

"It's a story that is sweet and funny and tragic," explains Jason Robards of the qualities that drew him to the project. "It's really a story

In addition to a prosthetic nose, Kevin Haney made epoxy casts for Robard's new face, working from a life mask of the actor.

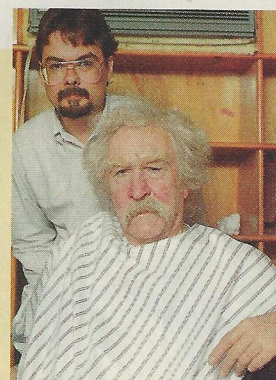

When Mark Twain meets young Dorothy Quick on a transatlantic voyage, the two find they have much in common and become fast friends. Amy Stewart portrays Dorothy and Jason Robards brings the American writer to life in The Disney Channel Premiere Film Mark Twain and Me, which is based on a true story.

Each day the prosthetics—which involved a chin, upper lip, and cheeks—had to be created anew and carefully applied before filming began.

Final touches: Twain's trademark moustache and tousled hair.

For the Holidays

Thanksgiving brings a movie marathon, "Those Amazing Animals." The next day there's our "Fights of Fancy" festival. Two specials celebrate Chanukah; and Christmas Eve and Day are devoted to great family holiday programming. Don't miss our Rodgers & Hammerstein marathon on New Year's Eve.

The Magical World of Disney

From The Disney Channel Premiere Films Mark Twain and Me and Back Home to White Fang to Fred MacMurray in the classic The Happiest Millionaire, it's the best in Disney entertainment.

Disney Channel Family Theater

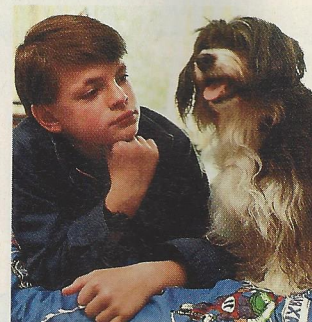

Great family films at 8:00 p.m. on Wednesdays and Thursdays and at 7:00 p.m. on Fridays and Saturdays, including Bugs Bunny's 3rd Movie: 1001 Rabbit Tales and The Adventures of Milo and Otis.

Tuesday Night Specials

Tuesday at 8:00 p.m. The highlights include New Kids On The Block: Hangin' Tough and Disneyland's All-Star Comedy Circus.

Disney Channel Discoveries

Our latest family gem is Woof! It's the tale of young Eric, a normal schoolboy with one small problem: he keeps turning into a dog! And Eric is afraid his parents and teacher will find out.

Avonlea

Return to the beginning of the century and the magical town of Avonlea on Prince Edward Island, the home of the mischievous Sara Stanley, her Aunts Olivia and Hetty, and her fun-loving King cousins.

Early Family Movies

You'll find some great films for family viewing at an earlier hour—6:30 p.m. Monday through Thursday and at 6:00 p.m. on Fridays, including Peter Pan and All Dogs Go to Heaven.

DISNEY NIGHT TIME

The Best of Hollywood

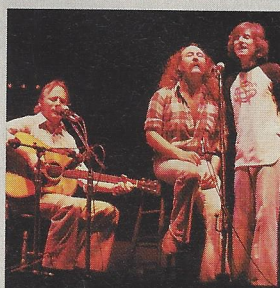

In November there's a two-film salute to Cary Grant with The Philadelphia Story and The Bishop's Wife; in November we honor the late Frank Capra (below) with a five film tribute, including It Happened One Night, the winner of five Academy Awards.

UPI/BETTWMANN

Musical Night

Classic Hollywood musicals including Bye, Bye, Birdie and My Fair Lady. Plus there's a Rodgers & Hammerstein marathon on New Year's Eve.

Sunday Night Showcase

Classic moments in rock 'n' roll with Crosby, Stills & Nash: Long Time Comin'—plus there are two great specials featuring Judy Garland.

Introducing Mickey & Pals Shampoo. Smooth sailing, one shampoo after another.

Until now, kids have had a lot more fun getting dirty than getting clean. That's why we made Mickey & Pals like no ordinary shampoo, it comes in a bottle that magically turns into a boat once the shampoo is gone.

Especially formulated for your child's sensitive skin and eyes, Mickey & Pals gently cleans and conditions, leaving hair soft, shiny and easy to manage. It's gentle, tear free formula comes in three boats and three terrific fragrances; apple, strawberry and citrus.

So for fun, clean hair and happy kids, it's smooth sailing with Mickey & Pals Shampoo.

Isn't It Time We Rewarded Teachers With More Than An Occasional Apple?

With all due respect to the Red Delicious and the McIntosh, we believe it's time to recognize outstanding teachers for what they truly are - modern day, unsung heroes. It is in this spirit that we present The American Teacher Awards, honoring those men and women who enlighten the minds and ignite the imaginations of our children. Won't you please join us? Our live presentation will take place on Sunday, November 24th, at 7p.m. ET/PT. You will find it exclusively on The Disney Channel.
